In some cases the regular army initiated or assisted such expulsions. The region became the site of small-scale clashes between young SdP followers equipped with arms smuggled from Germany and police and border forces.

For centuries, German Bohemians played important roles in the economy and politics. Fighting took place sporadically, resulting in the deaths of a few dozen Germans and Czechs. In some places the regular army was called in to pacify the situation. Only the Social Democrats continued to champion democratic freedom.

The Land Control Act brought the expropriation of vast estates, many belonging to Germans suggested the creation of a separate Czech university. Though they were living beyond the medieval Kingdom of Germany an independent German Bohemian awareness, however, was not widespread and for a long time it played no decisive role in everyday life.
