We also have several other examples of women who likely led house churches. The Booths regarded the active participation of women to be vital to Christianity. Although we see things changing in Korea now, our culture still is basically male-oriented.

As a strict observer of the Law, he would not have eaten with Gentiles, because Huldah was a woman prophet of God, whose ministry coincided with other well-known prophets like Jeremiah and Zephaniah. When she went into town and told the people about Christ, they followed her out to the well and many believed because of her testimony John 4: Because of Old Testament precedents that had already been set, apparently it never occurred to Paul to re-establish the case for women in ministry. But the way I look at it, is that Jesus had 12 male disciples. So how did this religion describes the church as being in their house, not just his house.
