Despite the fact that the decision of the Supreme Court did not surprise anyone, some of the opinions and arguments given in the decision provoked a great number of discussions and bitter reactions from Quebec politicians and constitutionalists. Therefore, based on all of the above, we can conclude that the Supreme Court of Canada clearly denied the right to unilateral secession of the province of Quebec, in accordance with international and domestic law.

Seeing as the idea of a bifurcated federalism was much more radical than the former, the similarity of their views made me more curious to know about Grant in details and encouraged me to read books by Grant and on Grant and I got more interested in the philosophy of George Grant. There has always been political mileage to be gained in Canada by being critical of Americans and emphasizing Canadian and US differences.
