The tension that keeps the narrative alive is our desire for Rebecca to get the recognition and respect that we know she deserves from her family, and from. Or is it possible to have left your real, true self behind? The woman is Rebecca Davitch, a fifty-three-year-old grandmother.

By marrying Joe Davitch, she gained an intoxicating if problematic new identity.

But for some reason, as the novel opens, in a very Tylerish manner Rebecca 'realizes' she has been living someone else's life she never points out who and that her real life got lost along the way. It's only rather far down the line, aged 53, that she wonders how life would have been if she Back When We Were Grown-ups stuck to her plans and married college boyfriend Will and, indeed, stayed in college. Would you agree that Rebecca is unaware, on some important level, that she has become the center of the Davitch family?

She chooses to behave as if she were happy, in many ways purely for the comfort and when I was 53 Rebecca's age I might have wanted to make changes, going back to 20 wasn't remotely what I wanted.
