Although my research is limited to three case studies, I could have selected many other examples. Exploring the Relationship between Place Attachment and Mobility. The tourist industry has been more successful on the Canadian side of the border since the mid-twentieth century, partly because it has a better view of the falls, but also because of various political and economic factors.

The most obvious and direct relationships between people and places of industrial ruination are abandoned factories, shipyards, warehouses, and refineries are features of many industrialized cities around the world. I was struck by the looming industrial ruins around Hamilton, Detroit, and Chicago, but I was even more astounded by the contrasts within Niagara Falls.

Across the globe, they have been occupied by artists, musicians, and squatters. This is a reflection of the changing relationship between Place and Society in the Late Modern Age.
