I have been reading the "Falco" Roman informer series and have enjoyed each book thus far read for various reasons. Lindsey Davis has written a bunch of historical novels set in ancient Rome, so she knows that era cold.

None of that is done. They come across as a young slave girl cooking sausages and

The writing was detached and unbiased -- which worked effectively in Mistress of Rome -- but in this book it read as dry and factual as a textbook. Paperback pages. I'm a lifelong reader of novels and I've read many of just about every kind and genre.
