Your child is also bound to have a host of feelings about this transition, feeling proud to be a big kid but at the same time worried about being separated from you and starting something unfamiliar. This echoed the finding of another study [pdf], which found that this brief intervention improved learning, engagement and motivation in maths classes.

Make trips past the school—discuss with your child how they will go into school. One group was not given a reason as to why they should work hard, the second was told that there would be a test at the end, the third was told they should put in effort because was expected of them, and the fourth group were told that it would help them achieve their future goals.
