However, Adam refused to accept any money earned by what he regards as war profits. When their money ran out six months later due to a slow market, Steinbeck and Carol moved back to Pacific Grove, California to a cottage owned by his father, on the Monterey Peninsula a few blocks outside the Monterey city limits. One of his last published works was Travels with Charley a travelogue of a road trip he took in to rediscover America. In May Steinbeck returned to California on an emergency trip to be with his friend Ed Ricketts, who had been seriously injured when a train struck his car.
