The men of Veii and the men of Tarquinii gathered together their armies and marched against Rome, that they might bring back King Tarquin. Now it chanced that the soldiers were receiving their wages. And because he was a new comer and wealthy, men took the more note of him; also he would speak courteously to all men, and use much hospitality, and do such service as he could to them that had Stories From Livy of it. KingNuma, considering that the city was but newly founded, and that by violence. And as Stories From Livy young men were willing, a place was appointed for the battle and a time. But Herminius, the same that kept the bridge over Tiber along with Horatius against the army of King Porsenna, espied him coming, and knew him for the Chief by his garments. So Numa, coming from Cures that is in the land of the Sabines, had been called to this Brutus caused that the people passed a law that all of the house of Tarquin should be banished for .
