Through death we find out truly what lies beyond our world. This World is not conclusion. SusanKornfeldNovember17,at The enormous popularity of his hymns made Watts a pervasive presence in the Connecticut Valley; Webster and Hitchcock made their towering presences known personally in Amherst. The world of Emily Dickinson, I suggest, centered on a personal religious experience of music, of language, of nature –an intensely personal experience guided by such highly unconventional and controversial personages as Isaac Watts, Noah Webster, Edward Hitchcock.

This success implies a second challenge: Interesting Literature is a part of the world that we know and live in is not the only one, and everything does not end with death. Yes, I would like to receive information from Aletheia partners.
